DESCRIPTION OF ORSAT APPARATUS.

The essential parts of the Orsat apparatus are a measuring burette, three absorption pipettes, a leveling bottle, and a header, all of which are made of glass. These glass parts are inclosed in a compact wooden case.

MEASURING BURETTE.

The measuring burette is a cylindrical glass vessel graduated into 100 units, each unit being graduated into fifths. The measuring burette of a full-size

Orsat apparatus has a volume of 100 c.c.; the volume of the burette of the half-size apparatus is 50 c. c. A volume of 16.38 c. c. is equal to 1 cubic inch. The burette is used for measuring the volume of gases during the process of analysis. It is inclosed in a water jacket which prevents sudden changes in temperature while the analysis is being made.

ABSORPTION PIPETTES.

The absorption pipettes are U-shaped glass vessels and contain solutions for absorbing the three principal constituents of the flue gas. The one nearest to the measuring burette contains potassium hydroxide solution for absorbing carbon dioxide; the second one contains an alkaline solution of pyrogallol acid for absorbing oxygen; and the third contains ammoniacal solution of cuprous chloride for absorbing carbon monoxide.

Two kinds of absorption pipettes are shown in figure 15.

The pipette with the opening and the ground-glass stopper near the top is not as good a design for general boiler-room work as the plain one. The stopper may become loose and the gas or solutions may leak out and cause trouble. One arm of the pipette contains Demonstrate the volume relationships of gas combination. Two-dimensional platinum electrodes included long and robust glass pipes have platinum electrodes sealed at the closed end with a 2 mm span space. The pipes are marked with a permanent brown staircase in divisions 0.1 or 0.2 ml respectively for 50 and 100 ml. A induction coil for use with eudiometers is recommended. The items selected below are currently on sale in: CDC recommends the collection of a buccal buffer sample as soon as possible after the onset of parotitis from all patients with clinical characteristics compatible with parotitis. See the collection, storage and shipping of samples for detailed instructions relating to the recommended sample for parotitis tests. A: A buccal buffer sample for the detection of the virus should be collected as soon as possible at the time of the suspicion of the disease of parotitis. The first collection of buccal buffer samples provides the best laboratory confirmation means, in particular among suspicious patients with parotitis with a vaccination story (Rota et al, 2013). If they passed 3 days from the start of symptoms, collect a buccal buffer sample for rrt-pcr and a serum sample for the detection of IgM. If the patient has orchitis/oophoritis, mastitis, pancreatitis, hearing loss, meningitis or encephalitis, he collects a buccal buffer sample for Rrt-PCR and a serum sample for the detection of IgM, regardless of the days from the start of the symptoms.
